Item B
Segmenting the airline market
Airlines operate in a market that has two distinct types of customers:
Business passengers who travel as part of their work
Leisure passengers who travel to go on holiday or to visit family and friends.
The following table classifies airline customer groups segmented by their attitude towards flying.
Group	Travel behaviour
Global executives	Frequently travel on business and enjoy it because of the high level of service. It is paid for by the business on an expense account. They enjoy a very high income and take several holidays each year.
Corporate troopers	Occasionally travel on business and use an airline and a class of travel chosen for them and paid by the business.
Reluctant travellers	Do not enjoy travel and look for services that will make the experience bearable, such as extra legroom and allocated seats. They view air travel as an integral part of a holiday and also use it to visit friends and relatives overseas.
Frugal flyers	Seek out the lowest cost airlines but still expect their flight experience to be a good one. They view air travel as a means to get from A to B. They want to save their money so it can be spent abroad.
